TALKING POINTSPolitical Situation

-- The Polish party has moved a step closer to the possible use of force.

- Nomination of Jaruzelski as Prime Minister raises threat more clearly, and, if Solidarity continues to call strikes, government obliged to make good on threat.

- Party leadership probably still considers martial law a last resort gamble. If purpose is to arrest dissidents or militant union leaders, great risk of confrontation and widespread violence. Would be less risky if used to end strikes.

-- Solidarity seems prepared for lull in strike activity but will continue pressing demands.

- No major labor unrest in the country at the moment.
- Walesa said there will be no strikes to press farmers' demand for a union.
- Union will come back to strike weapon if grievances go unsatisfied.

-- More active public role of Church may help ensure calm.
